

It's been three years since I accepted to serve as the Editor-in-Chief of Acta Chimica Slovenica, having set one goal—to bring the journal to new heights. To address this issue I initiated several projects, most of which have turned out to be exceedingly successful. The Journal's most important advances in developing into a more contemporary medium of publication happened in this short period of time. For the first time in the Journal's history a genuine editorial office was established with an international team of Associate Editors and board members, with an international peer-review system and ethical policies equivalent to any international journal of repute. The Journal in both printed and electronic versions has started to appear in a completely redesigned and a modern format. In combination with the above, the intense advertising activities launched recently also helped to enhance the Journal's visibility worldwide. Thanks to the authors, referees, and the editorial team, the scientific level of Acta Chimica Slovenica is rising.

My mission at Acta Chimica Slovenica is now accomplished. For me, this has been an incredibly rich experience both on the professional as well as personal fronts. I express my most sincere gratitude to everyone involved. As I head towards new projects and challenges, I wish the Journal the very best, and continued successes in rising to even higher levels in the future.

Sincerely yours,
Janez
